Course description: American politics and government have undergone major changes during our 230 years as a Constitutional Democratic Republic. From our founding as a rebellious breakaway colony of the British Empire, to our beginnings as an agrarian economy, through the industrial revolution, the Depression and War Years to the present day global economy and Internet revolution, our political and governmental institutions have undergone major changes. That process is guided by institutions such as the presidency, Congress, Supreme Court and states and local governments as well as individual elected representatives. Our subject for this course is an assessment of how promises made individual politicians, political parties and representative bodies are fulfilled by governmental institutions. This course explores the American political system with an emphasis on the federal bureaucracy and national government institutions. Topics include the U.S. Constitution, separation of powers, federalism, participation, the presidency, public opinion, Congress, political parties, and the conduct of elections. Current social, economic, foreign, and military policies are discussed. We study the original 18th Century design of our government under the Constitution and evaluate whether or not the current system of checks and balances, overlapping powers, federalism and judicial review adequately responds to 21st Century challenges, demands, and threats.

Instructor: Michael E. Milakovich (Ph.D. Indiana; B.A. UC-Santa Barbara) an internationally-recognized scholar and tenured professor of political science and public administration at the University of Miami. He has authored or co-authored 15 books, published numerous articles, chapters, and reviews in referred journals and developed online courses in American Government, Public Policy, Public Administration, and Digital Government. He served as an officer in the United States Army and in the Army Reserves from 1965-1984.

Grades: Five quizzes, five essays and a cumulative final will be given. Each quiz consists of objective multiple-choice questions, based on the text, class lectures and discussions. Class attendance, participation, book reports, student presentations, and discussions will count in determining your final grade. No make-ups will be given without prior approval and a signed statement from a licensed U.S. health care provider that illness prevented the student from taking the exam. No incompletes will be given unless you are earning a passing grade and have a medical condition or emergency, which prevents you from finishing the course.
